16 legs from Troy to Ogygia, dated by days since Troy fell. The planned crossing to Scheria is not on this list because it has not happened. Start at [[voyage/legs/troy-departure]].

Day 3 — Leg 1 -- Troy to the Thracian coast

Twelve ships and six hundred men off the beach at Troy on day 3, bound north-west along the Thracian coast with a fair wind.

Day 9 — Leg 2 -- Ismarus and the Cicones

A raid on Ismarus that should have taken a morning. Six men lost from every ship because they would not leave the wine.

Day 21 — Leg 3 -- Round Malea, and off the chart

Rounding Cape Malea with Ithaca three days off, the north wind took the fleet and drove it nine days south and west.

Day 30 — Leg 4 -- The land of the Lotus-eaters

Watering on the lotus coast; three men ate the fruit and had to be carried back to the ships bound. Then a long passage the log barely keeps.

Day 96 — Leg 5 -- The land of the Cyclopes

Twelve men into a cave that was not empty; six eaten, the rest out under the sheep, and a name shouted from the stern that has cost every year since.

Day 132 — Leg 6 -- Aeolia, and the bag

Guests of Aeolus on his floating island; sent off with every adverse wind tied in an ox-hide bag and only the west wind left loose.

Day 162 — Leg 7 -- Ithaca in sight, and the bag opened

Nine days of fair wind to within sight of the fires on Ithaca; I slept, the crew opened the bag, and every wind in it carried the fleet back to Aeolia.

Day 205 — Leg 8 -- The Laestrygonian harbour

Eleven ships moored inside a harbour with one narrow mouth; mine outside. The eleven were sunk with stones from the cliffs, and 484 men with them.

Day 246 — Leg 9 -- Aeaea, the first stay

A year on Circe's island: the men turned to swine and restored, a winter of rest, and the crew asking to go home before I did.

Day 611 — Leg 10 -- To the house of the dead

Sent by Circe to the edge of the world to ask Teiresias the way home. He gave the forecast. My mother was there, which nobody had told me.

Day 623 — Leg 11 -- Aeaea, the second stay

Back to bury Elpenor, then waiting out the seasons on Aeaea until Circe would give the route. She gave it on day 1038.

Day 1039 — Leg 12 -- Past the Sirens

Out of Aeaea with Circe's wind, wax in the crew's ears, and myself tied to the mast, exactly as she said.

Day 1043 — Leg 13 -- The strait

Through the strait on Scylla's side, as Circe advised. Six taken from the deck; Charybdis avoided.

Day 1044 — Leg 14 -- Thrinacia

Both seers said avoid the island. The crew outvoted me on landing, swore the oath, waited thirty days for a wind, and then ate the cattle.

Day 1084 — Leg 15 -- The wreck, and Charybdis again

Day 1085

Leg 16 — Adrift to Ogygia

Out of sight of land, Zeus's storm took the mast and then the ship. All thirty-one lost. A night later the current had carried me from Skylla into Charybdis.

Nine days adrift on a mast and a keel, and on the tenth night a beach. Calypso's island. The stay has lasted seven years.
