Six hundred embarked and six hundred were lost, at six places. Odysseus is the sole survivor. The loss records give each count with its cause.

SUPPORTING FILES

crew/losses/ismarus.md
Seventy-two, six from every ship. They would not leave the wine, and the Cicones came down at dawn with their neighbours from inland.

crew/losses/cyclopes.md
Six from my own ship, eaten two at a time over two days in a cave I chose to wait in.

crew/losses/laestrygonians.md
Four hundred and eighty-four. Eleven ships in a closed harbour, stones from the cliffs, and men speared like fish. One ship outside.

crew/losses/aeaea.md
One. Elpenor fell from Circe's roof the morning we sailed, and nobody counted him missing until he met us among the dead.

crew/losses/scylla.md
Six, taken from the deck in one pass. I knew the count before we entered the strait and did not tell them.

crew/losses/thrinacia.md
Thirty-one, everyone left. The oath, a month of wrong wind, the cattle killed while I slept, and the storm a day out.